In the world of numbers, we have a special order that helps us count and organize things. It's called ordinal numbers.

First, we have the number one, which comes at the beginning. Second comes after first, and then there's third. Next, we have fourth, followed by fifth. Then we have sixth, seventh, and eighth. After that, we have ninth, and finally, we reach tenth, which is the last in this series.

Remembering the order of these numbers can help us arrange things in a sequence and understand the position of objects or events.
